

Stephanie Mulrine, Research Associate, Newcastle University

Stephanie is a doctoral candidate and associate researcher with many years of experience conducting qualitative research across a range of topics related to health and illness.

With a background in medical sociology, her interests are particularly around the patient and public experience and perception of illness, healthcare and it's impact on their lives in a societal context.

Before recently joining Newcastle University, Stephanie worked at Teesside University on a variety of projects that utilised her methodological experience and expertise in interviews, focus groups and public engagement.

In 2017-18 she led on conducting a series of focus groups for Connected Health Cities to gather thoughts and opinions from members of the public on the Great North Care Record. Her interest going forward is to continue to engage and involve the experience of the public through multiple methods.

